A SLICK FORGER
BEHIND THE BARS

Teller Will Wright Notifies the Police to Come.

The Man Says His Name is Howard
Franklin—He Wants $400.

AN ACCOMPLICE IS SOUGHT

To the prompt and clever tact and presence of mind of Teller Will Wright of the First National Bank, is due the capture of either a slick forger or the tool of one. The man was taken into custody at the bank yesterday afternoon by Patrol Driver John Austin, who was sent from Police headquarters. Teller Wright had telephoned to send an officer to the bank at once.

The prisoner is young, rather well dressed and presented a check for $400.61 purporting to be drawn by the Ayer-Lord Tie company in favor of Howard E. Franklin.

Teller Wright detected at once upon looking at the paper that it was a forgery, as Ayer-Lord company does not pay out money in that way.

Pretending to have business in the rear of the bank he went back and telephoned the police, and upon returning began counting out the money as if to cash the check. Before he had finished Patrol Driver Austin arrived and nabbed his man.

The suspect says his name is Howard E. Franklin, and that he forged the check. He told the police that he lived in Texas, Tennessee and other states, but told President Robert Reeves, of the First National Bank that Franklin was his name that he lived up Tennessee river. He also confessed to the forgery, and a number of blank checks, as well as some filled out, were found on him when he was searched. The police seem to have their doubts about Franklin being the real forger, however, because about a month ago a similar check for $500 was forged and successfully passed in Paducah, and the police had since been on the trail of the man who passed it. The first check was in the same handwriting as the $400 check presented at the First National Bank yesterday, and was clearly written out by the same person. As the man who passed the first check would doubtless not attempt to pass another similar one with the police after him, as he knew they must be by this time, the police do not think Franklin did the work. Chief Collins is confident that the man under arrest is a tool or accomplice, and that some one else forged the checks and got some one to pass the first one, and Franklin to attempt to pass the second one.

This theory is strengthened by the fact that Franklin while admitting forging the check he attempted to pass yesterday, denies passing the one cashed about a month ago. The bank that cashed the other forged paper cannot now identify the man who passed it.

The police are now working up a case against Franklin and trying to locate the man who forged the check, and who is believed to be a professional. They are loud in their praise of Teller Wright for his quick and efficient work in effecting the capture.
